Topic: Is everyone an artist?

When we admire works like Mona Lisa or Sunflowers, we recognise them as art right away. But what about a student's drawing in class, or a friend's photo shared online? Is that art too? To me, art is anything creative. I enjoy visiting galleries and museums, but I am also keen on drawing portraits of my friends. Perhaps I'm not good at it, but I enjoy the time making it. What really matters is how art makes me feel when I create it — and how my drawing can brighten someone's day.

I enjoy going to art museums. Why? Because I appreciate high-quality art. Art is not like the drawings of young children or just portraits painted in bright colours. Some people believe that anything creative and cool can be considered art, but I disagree. True art is the result of creativity, skill and hard work. For example, my uncle showed a gift for art when he was a child. He became an artist after spending eight years studying art. Now his sculptures are often displayed in galleries. Creating art is challenging work, and it requires both talent and time.

How art keeps culture alive

People all over the world create different art forms to pass on culture.

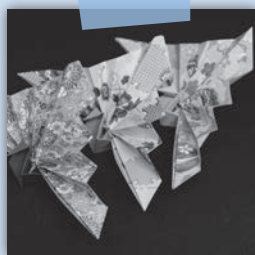

① Chinese calligraphy is the art of beautiful handwriting using brush and ink. It's more than just writing. People express feelings and thoughts through brushstrokes (画笔).

Each stroke must be carefully controlled in order to turn simple characters into flowing works of art. Calligraphy is often used for poems, sayings and important papers. It shows the deep connection between writing and Chinese culture.

Chinese calligraphy values balance, flow and harmony. It's not just writing — it's a graceful (优雅的), timeless art.

② Japan is famous for its paper art, called origami. Origami involves folding square sheets into shapes like animals or flowers. People make origami for gifts or decorations. This art is very old and important in Japanese culture. Some artists create complex (复杂的) shapes, using only one sheet of paper without cutting or gluing. Origami shows how something as simple as paper can become something beautiful.

③ Flamenco is a traditional Spanish art that includes singing, guitar playing, dancing and handclaps.

It is famous for its fast and exciting style. Flamenco songs are passionate (热情的), deep and emotional. Traditional flamenco songs are usually unwritten but passed down from generation to generation.

Art shows us what matters to people. Through calligraphy, origami, flamenco and other art forms, people share their stories, express their values and celebrate their ways of life. Art keeps traditions alive and helps us understand how people see the world.

A general description of the work of art

The descriptive details of the work of art

The writer's feelings about the work of art

My favourite work of art is Bicycle Race, created by the Mexican artist Antonio Ruiz. It was painted in 1938.

The painting shows a fun scene of a bicycle race. It's sunny and bright, with lots of people watching the race. Four racers race towards the finish line while excited children wave their arms and cheer. Some people watch from a tall wall on one side, while some guests sit on the other side. The street looks festive with colourful banners waving in the wind. The artist also added details like a goat eating and a dog sleeping. These details capture the look and feel of the town.

The painting feels so alive! When I look at it, I can almost hear the crowd cheering and feel the excitement of the race. It is such a joyful painting that I want to step into it and enjoy the event as well.

Many great inventions start with a simple idea and come about by accident. They often change the way we live. Some make our jobs easier, while others fulfill (满足) a need or solve a problem.

The American scientist Percy Spencer was studying radar (雷达) technology during World War II. One day in 1945, he was testing a machine. To his surprise, he noticed that the chocolate in his pocket melted. Curious about the cause, he did a test. He put some corn in the machine. It became popcorn! After further testing, he realised it was a new way to cook — he invented the microwave oven! This invention made cooking much quicker.

The Swiss engineer George de Mestral got the idea for Velcro after a walk with his dog in the woods in 1941. When they returned home, he found that both his clothes and his dog were covered with seed pods (种子荚), which were really hard to get rid of. After a careful check, he discovered that these pods had many little hooks. The hooks could stick to looped (有环的) materials like clothing or animal fur (皮毛). This discovery led to the invention of Velcro in 1948. It's now used in shoes and clothes and helps people who have difficulty with zippers and buttons. You can even find it in space exploration.

Have you ever imagined life with no light or colours? For blind people, everyday tasks become challenges. This was true for Louis Braille. The French boy's life changed when he was three.

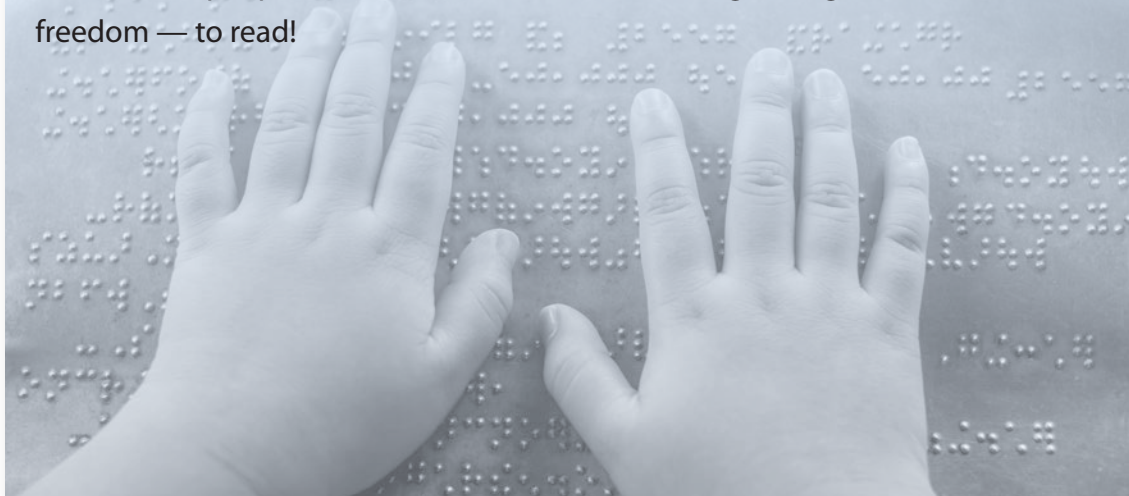

☐ One day, a soldier who knew a special code used in wars visited Louis's school. The code had 12 raised dots. He explained that soldiers often passed messages secretly with the special code in wars. They could feel the dots and got the message even in the dark.

☐ Louis couldn't learn well at school though he was clever. Luckily, he could attend a school for blind boys in Paris when he was ten. There were fourteen books with special raised letters there, but they were hard for him to read. Louis was very upset.

☐ While playing with a sharp tool in his father's factory, Louis accidentally hurt his eye. Unfortunately, he lost his eyesight a few days later because of an infection (感染) from the tool.

☐ How excited Louis was when he heard it! He thought blind kids like him could use this way for reading. Later, Louis simplified (简化) the code by reducing the number of dots from twelve to six and improved it. He worked on the code through his life until it was easy for blind people of all ages to use.

His work resulted in "Braille" writing, named after him. The first Braille book was published in 1829, and Braille is still used by blind people today. Thanks to Braille, blind people can feel the letters with their fingers. It gives them a new freedom — to read!

What do you know about money?

Have you ever wondered where money comes from and how it works? Let's take a quick look to learn about money!

The start of money

Thousands of years ago, people didn't use paper or metal money. Instead, they traded useful things — like shells, salt, animals or even big stones — to get what they needed. As trade became more common, people started creating coins and later paper money to make buying and selling easier.

(1) _____

The first known coins were made around 2,600 years ago in a place called Lydia (now part of Turkey). These coins were made from a mix of gold and silver and helped people trade more easily.

The first paper money in China

China was the first country to use paper money, during the Song dynasty. Merchants (商人) used special notes instead of heavy coins. This made travel and trade much more convenient.

(2) _____

Today, there are about 180 kinds of currency (货币) around the world. Each one has its own name and value, like the dollar, euro, yen or yuan.

(3) _____

Many countries put famous people on their coins and banknotes — like kings, writers or leaders. This helps celebrate important figures (人物) and also makes money easier to recognise.

(4) _____

Modern banknotes have cool features like shiny strips, tiny letters and special pictures. These help stop people from making fake money.

The study of money

The study of how money works is called economics. It helps us understand why things cost what they do and how countries manage money.

Why do prices often end in “.99”?

Have you noticed how many prices end in “.99”?

A toy might cost $19.99 instead of $20, or a snack might be $4.99 instead of $5. It looks like only a tiny difference, but have you ever thought about why stores do this?

This pricing method is called “Charm pricing”. It means setting prices just below a round number, like $19.99. Even though $19.99 and $20 are almost the same, people feel that $19.99 is much cheaper. That one cent can change how we feel about the price!

Why does this trick work? Economists explain it with something called the “Left-digit effect”. When we read numbers, our brain looks at the first digit first. So when we see $19.99, our mind focuses on “19” instead of rounding it up to “20”. It feels like a better deal, even though the difference is small.

Charm pricing is used almost everywhere. Online shops often set prices like $99.99 or $49.99. Clothing stores may sell a shirt for $29.99. Even technology companies sell phones at $999 instead of $1,000. People often believe they are paying less, so they are more willing (愿意) to buy.

There is even a real example. A store in the USA once tried using only round numbers for all their products. But customers didn't like it, and sales dropped. Later, the store returned to charm pricing like $49.99 — and sales quickly went up again!

Of course, charm pricing doesn't work equally (同样地) well for all products. It is most common with everyday items, discounts or low- to mid-priced goods. But when it comes to luxury products, such as jewellery or designer bags, stores prefer to use round numbers, like $8,000, because round prices make things look more special and high-class.

Next time you go shopping, look closely at the price tags. That little “.99” may be doing more work than you think!

3-1 Tick (✓) the examples mentioned in the article. 勾选文章中提到的例子。

- ☐ A. A phone is sold at $999 instead of $1,000.
- ☐ B. A USA store tried round numbers, but sales went down.

- ☐ D. A supermarket sells apples for $1 each.
- ☐ E. A designer bag is priced at $8,000 to look more special.

3-2 Match the examples A to E you ticked in Exercise 3-1 with the following opinions. 将练习 3-1 中你勾选出的例子与下列观点配对, 填写序号 (A-E)。

Healthy oceans, healthy business

Do you enjoy eating shrimp, mussels (贻贝), or other seafood? Food from the sea is an important part of our diet. But have you ever thought about how it reaches our table?

Seafood comes from two main sources: fishing in the ocean or farming in the sea. If people catch or farm too much without care, the environment will suffer, fish stocks may run out, and even our planet could be in danger. So we need to learn how to live ⁽¹⁾ _____ with the sea if we want it to continue feeding us.

Today, large companies play a big role in catching and farming seafood. Now, they may want to take as much seafood as possible to make money. But over time, this will harm both the ocean and their business. That is why scientists are trying to work with these companies in a more ⁽²⁾ _____ way.

A group of scientists once carried out a two-year study on the seafood industry. Their ⁽³⁾ _____ was surprising: 13 big companies held a dominant (占支配地位的) ⁽⁴⁾ _____ in the world's seafood trade. A few of them even had nearly 40% of the most valuable fish, such as salmon (鲑鱼) and shrimp. If such powerful groups do not change, the situation will become ⁽⁵⁾ _____ for both people and nature.

The scientists then tried to ⁽⁶⁾ _____ with the problem by talking to the CEOs. They explained that science could help the companies in the long run. These talks led to a conference. Scientists and business leaders discussed how to live in better ⁽⁷⁾ _____ with the ocean.

Of course, working together is not always easy. Sometimes scientists and companies cannot ⁽⁸⁾ _____ agree, and progress may be slow. But if both sides cooperate, they will benefit. Healthy oceans mean healthy business — and a safer future for us all.

It's about the coffee

One sunny afternoon, several young adults visited their former teacher. They graduated from university a year ago and were now busy with jobs. Life had become full of rush, and sometimes they forgot to enjoy the simple joys around them.

To help them ⁽¹⁾ _____, the teacher offered to make coffee. The teacher came back with a tray holding six cups: some were plain paper cups, while others were pretty ceramic (陶瓷的) ones. "Help ⁽²⁾ _____," he smiled.

Right away, everyone picked a cup. Most chose the ⁽³⁾ _____ ones. One person even joked, "I drove the farthest ⁽⁴⁾ _____ I should get the best cup!" Another seemed ⁽⁵⁾ _____ that everyone cared so much about which cup they got. What a scene it was!

The teacher waited until everyone had their coffee. Then he said gently, "Did you see? You all wanted the best cups, but what you really came for was the coffee, right? Life ⁽⁶⁾ _____ the same way. We focus on the outside (the cup), but forget what's inside (the coffee)."

The room got quiet. They realised the coffee was the same in every cup, but they had been ⁽⁷⁾ _____ busy comparing the cups to notice this.

This little moment teaches us something big about what really matters. True wealth isn't about having lots of things — it's about ⁽⁸⁾ _____ and sharing what's meaningful. A fun trip isn't special because of where you go, but because of the laughs and memories with friends. A nice meal isn't just about the food, but about the people sitting with you.

Some people work hard just ⁽⁹⁾ _____ more things, thinking it will make them happy. But real happiness comes when your work and your life match what you truly care about.

⁽¹⁰⁾ _____ important it is to remember this well! So next time you make a choice, stop and ask yourself, "Am I picking the cup ... or the coffee?"

Have you ever thought about how art appears in many different forms around the world? From children's drawings to huge street paintings, from natural materials to modern tools, art brings colour and creativity into our lives. What makes it even more exciting is the people behind those works. Artists of all ages find their own ways to express ideas and share beauty with others. Here are three artists who show how inspiring art can be.

The young painter

At the age of five, a British boy named Kieron Williamson began drawing boats during a trip to Cornwall. That moment sparked (激起) his love for art.

Growing up in Norfolk, he learned from local artists and developed his skills. By the age of nine, his talent had gained international attention, and many people admired his work. Kieron says, "I like creating art because it's fun and allows me to think of places I can't see."

The street artist

Next time you go out for a walk, you might come across Edgar Mueller's art. Mueller is a German street painter who loves to create something new. His three-dimensional (三维的) works like waterfalls or canyons (峡谷) can be found at festivals worldwide. He uses chalk, brushes and tape to help people see places differently.

The nature sculptor

Patrick Dougherty is a sculptor who mixes his love of nature with carpentry (木工) skills. He bends (使弯曲) young trees or saplings, and weaves them into rounded shapes. Local volunteers help collect materials and build the exhibits. The sculptures are temporary (临时的), breaking down over time, but they wake up people's imagination.

Amazing young inventors

Young people are always full of cool ideas. Let's meet three teenagers who have made amazing inventions to help solve daily problems.

Ann: A special flashlight

Ann, a smart girl from Canada, invented a special flashlight at just 15. Normal flashlights need batteries or electricity to work, but hers doesn't need any batteries or electricity. It works with the heat from a person's hand! She got the idea from her friend in the Philippines who couldn't do her homework at night because of power shortages (短缺). Ann thought, "Our bodies produce heat all the time. Why not use it to make light?" After trying many times, she finally made a flashlight that really works with body heat. Later, she even made something cooler — a cup that can charge your phone with heat from hot drinks!

Kylie: A helpful backpack

Kylie, an 11-year-old girl from the USA, had cancer and needed to get shots (注射) every day. For the treatment, she had to carry a heavy machine that held the medicine. But the machine was so heavy that walking around with it was really hard. Kylie didn't like this, so she designed a new backpack that is light, colourful, and made just to hold the medical machine safely. Now, other sick children can also use this backpack to move around more easily. Both doctors and patients thanked her for the great solution.

Arsh: A talking device

Some people, like the late (已故的) scientist Stephen Hawking, cannot speak due to disabilities. They need to “talk” with special communication devices. Traditional devices are often slow and expensive. Arsh, a 16-year-old student from India, made a new device called TALK. It can turn breath signals into spoken words. Users simply breathe into a small microphone, and the machine translates their breath into words and speaks them aloud. Compared to older devices, TALK is much faster and more affordable.

The £1,000,000 Banknote

Henry Adams, a young American clerk, once lived a simple life in San Francisco. One day, by accident, he was carried far away on a ship and finally arrived in London. When he stepped onto the streets of the great city, he had only one dollar left in his pocket. He felt hopeless, with no job and no friends.

Two rich brothers happened to notice him. They liked to play games with life, so they made a very unusual bet. Could a man survive in London for a month with nothing but a single piece of money — a banknote that was far too large to change? They invited Henry into their house, listened to his story, and then handed him a one-million-pound note. Henry could hardly believe his eyes.

At first he was frightened. How could anyone use such a note? But when he showed it to shopkeepers, something surprising happened. Nobody dared refuse him. People trusted that a man with such a note must be rich. Soon Henry was wearing good clothes, eating in the best restaurants, and walking into places where only gentlemen could enter. Newspapers wrote about him, and crowds followed him in the street. He became known as “the strange millionaire”.

Although he lived like a gentleman with excitement, Henry worried about the future. He often said to himself, “When the truth comes out, will everyone laugh at me?” Yet the banknote also brought him opportunities (机会). He met important people, including the American ambassador (大使).

In the end, the bet was discovered. Instead of losing everything, Henry gained respect. The rich brothers offered him an important job, and Henry promised to do that job well and pay back all the shopkeepers. What started as a joke with a banknote changed his life forever.

Hurricane and tornado: What's the difference?

Hurricanes and tornadoes are strong storms that can destroy almost everything in their way. What are the differences between them? Let's find out.

Hurricane

A hurricane is a very strong and dangerous storm with high winds and heavy rain. It has a round shape. It forms over warm ocean water and gets its power from the heat of the water. The wind in a hurricane can reach speeds of at least 74 miles per hour.

a hurricane

Although the centre of the storm, called the “eye”, is the calmest part, the strong winds, heavy rain and big waves around the “eye” can cause great damage.

As a hurricane moves over land, it slowly gets weaker, yet it can still cause problems.

Hurricanes are very large in size (up to 1,000 miles in diameter) and can last for a week or more.

To stay safe during a hurricane, people should stay indoors, keep away from windows, and stay updated on weather news. It's also important to prepare food, water and a flashlight in case the power goes out.

Tornado

A tornado is a fast-spinning tube of air shaped like a funnel (漏斗). It forms from strong thunderstorms when warm air meets cold air. The wind in a tornado can go as fast as 300 miles per hour!

Unlike hurricanes, tornadoes do not have a clear “eye” because they are more difficult to see clearly and may have smaller spinning parts inside.

Tornadoes can happen over both land and water. They are about a thousand times smaller than hurricanes in diameter and usually last only about an hour, but their wind is very strong and can cause terrible damage.

a tornado

To stay safe during a tornado, people should seek shelter in a small room with no windows or stay in a basement. They should crouch down (蹲下), cover their heads, and wait until the storm has fully passed.

Effects	strong winds, heavy rain, (7) _____, great damage	strong winds, ⁽⁸⁾ _____

2-2 Decide whether the following statements are true (T) or false (F). Then find evidence from the passage to support your answer.

Typhoon Mara hits Seaview Village

By Jason, School News Team

SEAVIEW, 10 June — Last Friday, Typhoon Mara brought strong winds and heavy rain to Seaview Village. The storm lasted 12 hours, with wind speed up to 120 km/h. Many homes were destroyed, trees fell down, and the streets were flooded. The village was without power for three days. Older villagers said it was one of the worst storms in years.

Carlos, a 52-year-old fisherman, shared his experience. "... it all happened so fast. The waves were really huge and, um, they destroyed my fishing dock (码头) first. Then, water started coming into our house — like, really quickly. We didn't even have time to pack anything. So, my wife and I took our kids and ran to the bathroom. We stayed there for hours. Oh, and I remember — after we got to the bathroom, the lights went out and it got really dark and scary. Later, when the water went down, we came out and saw the mess. It was ... really bad. But still, I feel lucky. We're all safe, and that's what matters."

At the village school, now a shelter, 14-year-old Linda said, "First we heard loud noises, and then the windows broke. My mother took us to our neighbour's basement." Her younger brother still feels scared when it rains. Over 50 families are staying at the shelter. Doctors say many children are having trouble sleeping after the storm.

Weather experts believe the ocean near Seaview is getting warmer, which may make storms stronger. This was already the third big storm this year.

Now, the village is working to recover. Students are using social media to collect clothes and food. Fishermen are fixing boats. "The storm hit us hard," Carlos says, "but we will rebuild together."

3-1 Put the following sentences A to F in the correct order according to the sequence of events. 根据事件的发生顺序, 将下列句子正确排序, 填写序号 (A-F)。

- A. The electricity went out and it got dark.
- B. Carlos' family came out of the bathroom.
- C. The water rushed into the house quickly.
- D. The waves destroyed Carlos' fishing dock.
- E. Carlos' family stayed in the bathroom for hours.
- F. Carlos saw the damage after the water went down.

3-2 Answer the questions. 回答问题。

(2) How long did Typhoon Mara last?

(3) What did Carlos and his family do when the water entered their house?

By the rushing riverbank, Yu Boya's fingers moved gracefully across his guqin. The music rose like high peaks and flowed like rushing water. Many stopped to admire his skills, yet no one understood the feelings in his music.

The woodcutter, Zhong Ziqi smiled. "A musician's heart speaks through his music. You don't just play notes. You show us the world."

Boya's heart beat fast. No one had ever said anything like this before.

This time, Boya played faster. Ziqi's face lit up. "Now it's the river! So powerful, unstoppable, like ten thousand dragons roaring together!"

Boya was amazed. "How do you know?"

Friendship myths

Friendship is important to teenagers all over the world. However, they sometimes expect too much from it. Here are three myths that some teenagers believe about friendship. But in fact, they aren't true.

Myth No. 1: Real friends must be available 24/7.

Myth No. 2: The more friends you have, the cooler you are.

Myth No. 3: Fighting means the end of friendship.

Here's what some teenagers from different countries said.

Aisha, 14, Cape Town, South Africa

My friend Zara and I argued about who broke her headphones. For weeks, we didn't speak until our teacher, Ms Miller, sat us down and said, "Friendship is woven through forgiveness (原谅)." We realised that having a fight wasn't the end of friendship. It was just a knot (结) in our thread (线).

Noah, 17, Vancouver, Canada

In my freshman year, I bragged (吹嘘) about having 500+ friends on social media. But when I got really sick, only three people came to see me: my childhood neighbour Raj, my debate partner Leah, and my grandma. That's when I realised that real friendship is about showing up, not showing off. Now I'd rather have a few true "snowstorm friends" (who'll dig your car out at 6 a.m.) than a thousand followers. A few good friends are more important than lots of friends, right?

Aiko, 16, Tokyo, Japan

During exam week, I was so busy studying that I didn't reply to my best friend Emi's messages for three days. When I finally checked my phone, I thought she would be upset — but instead, I found a note from Emi, "Good luck in your exams! Remember to eat when you have time." My mum handed me a box of chocolates that had been left outside our door. That moment taught me something important: True friends understand when you get busy and trust that you'll reconnect when you can.

3-1 Match each teenager with the myths they are arguing against.

将每位青少年与其反驳的关于友谊的误解配对。

(5) Why did Aiko think Emi would be upset when she finally checked her phone?

Shanghai Fashion Week: where runway dreams become global trends

This year's Shanghai Fashion Week started on 9 October. It is a big event where Chinese traditions mix with modern fashion. Designers used traditional Chinese art, like famous poems and beautiful ink paintings, to create new clothes. Some outfits were decorated with patterns from ancient paintings, while others were designed to look as flowing as Chinese calligraphy brushstrokes.

This fashion show is held twice a year — in spring and autumn. Many important people come, including famous designers, store buyers, fashion journalists and celebrities. They watch the shows to decide what will be popular next season. At each show, models walk on a long runway (called a "T-stage") wearing 30–50 new outfits. Some look like modern versions of traditional Chinese dresses, while others are bold and futuristic (未来感的).

Big stores choose which clothes to sell in their shops around the world. Fashion journalists take photos to show people the latest styles. Celebrities also get fashion ideas from the runway and wear similar clothes later.

After Fashion Week, the most popular designs become easier to buy. Soon, stores sell simpler and cheaper versions of these clothes. This way, everyone can wear the newest trends. Shanghai Fashion Week is not just about art — it also helps decide what people will wear around the world.

- (1) How often is Shanghai Fashion Week held?
A. Once a year. B. Only in autumn.
C. Twice a year. D. Four times a year.
- (2) What traditional Chinese elements inspired designers?
A. Famous poems and ink paintings.
B. Ancient pottery and sculptures.
C. Folk dances and opera masks.
D. Traditional holidays and festivals.
- (3) How do fashion journalists contribute to Fashion Week?
A. By designing clothes.
B. By taking photos to show new styles.
C. By organising runway shows.
D. By selling tickets.
- (4) What happens to popular designs after Fashion Week?
A. They disappear forever.
B. Stores sell simpler and cheaper versions.
C. Only celebrities can buy them.
D. They become museum exhibits.
- (5) Why is Shanghai Fashion Week important beyond art?
A. It teaches people how to paint.
B. It only benefits famous designers.
C. It replaces other fashion weeks.
D. It influences global fashion trends.

The broken bracelet

Emma held the broken pieces of her favourite bracelet in her hand. The blue beads had scattered (散落) everywhere after Sarah's basketball hit her wrist.

Sarah rushed over, "I'm so sorry, Emma! Are you okay?" She knelt down, picking up the beads carefully.

Emma paused. She wanted to be angry, but she knew it had been an accident. She turned away, hiding her feelings. "It's fine. I know you didn't mean it."

Sarah's eyes filled with regret. "I'll fix it — I promise."

Emma didn't reply. She walked off. The bracelet had been a gift from her grandmother, and now it was ruined.

The next morning, Sarah came over with a small box. "I stayed up late fixing this," she said, handing it to Emma nervously.

Emma opened it, surprised to see the bracelet carefully repaired with silver threads woven between the blue beads.

"I asked my grandma for help," Sarah explained, looking at Emma hopefully.

Emma blinked back tears. "You knew that blue is my favourite colour?"

Sarah smiled. "Of course. And I added silver because it matches you — you always stand out in class."

A week later, during PE class, Sarah tripped and twisted (扭伤) her ankle. She sat on the bench, biting her lip as pain and embarrassment filled her eyes. Emma rushed over, kneeling beside her. "Don't move too much," she said gently, taking off her jacket and folding it into a cushion (垫子). "Here — rest your ankle on this until the nurse comes."

Sarah looked at her in surprise. "You don't have to —"

Emma cut her off with a smile. "Of course I do. You've always been there for me. Now it's my turn."

Sarah's face softened as she leaned back. "You are the best, Emma."

Emma laughed. "That's what best friends are for, right?"

Early warning systems

Thunderstorm Warning System

In summer, we often get thunderstorms with loud thunder, bright lightning, heavy rain and strong winds. To detect storms early, scientists use a weather radar (雷达) to track storm clouds forming in the sky. When the radar finds a storm becoming dangerous, alerts (警报) are sent quickly through phone messages or TV news. If you get a thunderstorm alert, go inside a building right away. Stay away from windows, and avoid using electrical devices.

Flood Warning System

When it rains too much, rivers and lakes can rise very fast and flood roads or even houses. To predict floods early, scientists put water level sensors (传感器) near rivers and lakes to check if the water is rising dangerously. If the sensors find the water getting too high, alerts come through radio, TV or phones. Floods can happen very suddenly. So when you get a flood alert, the most important thing is to move to higher ground quickly.

Blizzard Warning System

In winter, a blizzard brings heavy snow, strong winds and extremely cold temperatures. Weather satellites (卫星) and ground stations work together to monitor winter storms. When the system finds dangerous signs, it sends warnings to people through news channels and phone notifications (通知) from weather apps. If you get a warning, you should stay inside somewhere warm, wear thick clothes, and stock up on food and water. You must avoid travelling or drive very carefully if you must.

All these systems help people protect themselves from thunderstorms, floods and blizzards. The earlier we know about the danger, the more time we have to prepare and stay safe.
